The EU's General Data Protection Regulation enters into force on 25 May 2018

Keeping our customers data safe is nothing new to us. Protecting the information and the personal data that our customer share with us has always been at the centre of how we do banking. When you as a customer share information with Nordea Group, we are better able to offer customized financial advice and services.

Over the past years, new technology has been playing an increasingly significant role in our lives, including how our personal data and online activities are stored and used by companies. This has created a need for updated rules to match the way personal data can be used today.

The result is the General Data Protection Regulation, GDPR. The new regulation is expected to be implemented May 25, 2018 and will apply to all companies and organizations that handle personal data within the European Economic Area. The introduction of GDPR puts an increased focus on individuals having the right to be in charge of their own personal data. This includes individuals representing corporate or institutional customers.

As a corporate or institutional customer, you will disclose some of your employee's or other relevant party's personal data to us. As such, you are also responsible to inform these individuals of Nordea's privacy policy.

Information about how Nordea handles personal data can be found in our Privacy Policy. The data protection policy is appended to this letter. Following the new regulation, we have also updated our terms and conditions and, where applicable, referred to our privacy policy.
